Subject: envlawprofessors: publication opportunity for env law students

Dear Colleagues:

The following is a notice of a publication opportunity for law students with the National Sea Grant Law Center at the University of Mississippi. I hope you will pass this along to your students.

Best,

David

National Sea Grant Law Center
University of Mississippi
Publication and Research Opportunities in Ocean and Coastal Law

Sea Grant is very similar to the land grant college system. NOAA has designated 30 universities to receive federal funding to conduct ocean- and coastal-related research, education, and outreach. The Sea Grant Law Center is an initiative of the Sea Grant College Program that conducts research on ocean and coastal law issues and disseminates non-biased legal information to the Sea Grant network and its constituents - fishermen, resource managers, policy makers, etc. Issues include public access, fisheries, offshore aquaculture, and aquatic invasive species.

The Law Center offers law students from across the country the opportunity to write articles for publication in the Law Center's legal reporters. The Law Center publishes two quarterly newsletters. Each newsletter features case summaries of recent court decisions in ocean and coastal law (CZMA, ESA, fisheries, etc.). Most articles are 2-3 pages long and written for a non-legal audience. The time commitment is approximately 10 hours per article. For more information, please visit our website at <http://www.olemiss.edu/orgs/SGLC/National/reporter.html> . Law students may also have the opportunity to work with Law Center staff on research projects and law review articles.

The Law Center has worked with law students as far away as the University of Hawaii. Opportunities are volunteer, but the positions provide great opportunities to get involved in developing issues. If you are interested, please send a cover letter, resume, and short (no more than three pages) writing sample by email to:
